Wall Street greed and outrageous pay practices were a major cause of the recent economic collapse. First, let us change the incentives so they don't collapse our economy again by evaluating and delaying the bonuses for several years, at least five. That way, we'll know if the loans they made in year one remain good. Too often bankers paid themselves on the volume of loans they generated, not on their quality. Secondly, tax their earnings over a seemly amount tied to the average pay of a blue collar worker. The disproportion between the pay of executives and laborers has gotten way out of balance for the good of our society.

Thank you for considering my comment,
