

From: Kathe Brown <katwilm@msn.com>
Sent: Monday, May 30, 2011 9:29 PM
To: !FHFA REG-COMMENTS
Subject: Comments regarding RIN 2590-AA42

I'm writing because my family and I were affected by the economic collapse of 2008, and we don't want it to happen again.

I'm writing because my family and I were affected by the economic collapse of 2008, and we don't want it to happen again.

To give you a succinct image for the reasons the beast that is Capitalism must be governed properly - starkly is this....

(see credits below)

But surely stock-market psychopaths can't be as bad as serial-killer psychopaths," I said.

"Serial killers ruin families," shrugged Hare. "Corporate and political and religious psychopaths ruin economies. They ruin societies."

It wasn't only Hare who believed that a disproportionate number of psychopaths can be found in high places. Over the following months, I spoke to scores of psychologists who all said the same. Everyone in the field seemed to regard psychopaths in this same way: inhuman, relentlessly wicked forces, whirlwinds of malevolence, forever harming society but impossible to identify unless you're trained in the subtle art of spotting them, as I now was.

I met an American CEO, Al Dunlap, formerly of the Sunbeam Corporation, who redefined a great many of the psychopath traits to me as "business positives": Grandiose sense of self-worth? "You've got to believe in yourself." (As he told me this, he was standing underneath a giant oil painting of himself.) Cunning/manipulative? "That's leadership."

article by:

Jon Ronson
The Guardian, Saturday 21 May 2011

Article history

^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^^

<http://www.guardian.co.uk/books/2011/may/21/jon-ronson-how-to-spot-a-psychopath>

the rest of this is very worth the read

Kathe Brown

Wilmington, NC